

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface	IX
Introduction	XIII
I. Sense of belonging as a problem of multicultural society	1
1. Multiculturalism as an approach to multicultural society	1
1.1 Charles Taylor	1
1.2 Will Kymlicka	7
2. Sense of belonging as a task of multicultural society	16
2.1 Susan Mendus	17
2.2 Michael Ignatieff	22
3. Horizontal relations	28
3.1 Requirement of horizontal relations with others             for belonging to the whole society	28
3.2 Sympathy as an approach to the problem of the sense             of belonging to a society	32
II. Adam Smith's sympathy and society: sympathy as a necessary condition for a society	35
1. The character of Smith's concept of sympathy	35
1.1 A description of Smith's concept of sympathy	37
1.1.1 Definition and features of sympathy	38
1.1.2 Sympathy and moral judgement	40
1.1.3 Sympathy and fellow-feeling	44
1.2 Characteristics of Smith's concept of sympathy	48
1.2.1 Smith's 'sympathy' and Francis Hutcheson's                 'innate benevolence'	48
1.2.2 Smith's 'cognitive sympathy' and David Hume's                 'law of sympathy'	53
2. Smith's sympathy and society	59
2.1 How sympathy, for Smith, makes the 'same and different'             possible simultaneously: the compatibility of self-love             and altruism	60

2.1.1	The dynamic mechanism for the transformation of self-interest into public good	61
2.1.2	The problem of virtue and vice	64
2.1.3	Smith's sympathy and Amartya Sen's sympathy and commitment	68
2.2	Sympathy as a medium of 'many and one'	72
2.2.1	Justice of Smith and Hume: fellow-feeling or Utility	72
2.2.2	Society as emotion	83
2.2.3	Fellow-feeling as a necessary sentiment for society	89
2.3	Historical aspects of Smith's theory and its application to today's multicultural society	100
2.3.1	Smith's question and his answer to it	101
2.3.2	The difference between Smith's time and today and the significance of his theory	105
III.	The significance of Smith's sympathy for today's multicultural society	111
1.	The community unit and multicultural society: the compatibility of sympathy with self-love and altruism	111
1.1	Content and significance of Michael Sandel's communitarianism	112
1.2	Some criticisms of Sandel and the task ahead	116
1.3	Criticism of Sandel from Smith's perspective of sympathy and the possibility of a response to multicultural society	120
2.	Citizenship and the politics of daily life: sympathy as fellow-feeling	125
2.1	The expansion and deepening of citizenship	126
2.2	Citizenship as radical democracy	130
2.2.1	Chantal Mouffe's theory of citizenship	130
2.2.2	The demand of sympathy for a fair understanding of 'political' in multicultural society	133
2.3	Recognition as the principle of equal citizenship and sympathy	137
2.3.1	Hegel's theory of recognition	137
2.3.2	A problem with Hegel's theory of recognition	140
2.3.3	Hegel's theory of recognition and Smith's theory of sympathy	145
2.4	The significance of sympathy as fellow-feeling in society	147
2.4.1	The role and the limit of law in multicultural society	147
2.4.2	Problems of the lack of sympathy as fellow-feeling	149
2.4.3	Self-esteem and self-respect as a public problem	159
3.	Sympathy as a foundation of citizenship of multicultural society	163

IV. Sympathy and the possibility of mutual understanding in multicultural society	169
1. Smith's sympathy as moral naturalism	169
1.1 Smith's sympathy as cognitive naturalism	169
1.2 Smith's sympathy mediated by cognition	172
2. The possibility of understanding as a condition for cognitive naturalism	175
2.1 Problems of incommensurability of value for sympathy	175
2.1.1 Problems of incommensurability of value and relativism for sympathy	175
2.1.2 Levels of incommensurability of values	178
2.2 Conceptual incommensurability	180
2.2.1 Winch's incommensurability of concepts	180
2.2.2 Criticisms of Winch and the nature of concepts	184
2.2.3 Another criticism of Winch on the level of difference between cultures	190
2.3 Possibility of understanding through infiltration	192
2.3.1 Tacit knowledge and its character: understanding language in a broad sense from tacit knowledge	193
2.3.2 The possibility of acquiring tacit knowledge by infiltration	199
2.3.3 The relative view of the status of language from a tacit knowledge perspective and possibility of understanding	201
3. The process of formation of the self and the possibility of moral naturalism	209
3.1 Society as a source of the self and the acquisition of roles through exchanges of attitudes	210
3.2 The sharing of attitudes that connect understanding and sentiment	214
4. The relation of incommensurability of meanings and incommensurability of values	219
5. Conditions for enabling sympathy in reality	227
5.1 Communication at the social level	228
5.2 How the view of others is opened on the social level	232
5.2.1 Stereotypes	232
5.2.2 Prejudice	234
5.3.3 The required direction for sympathy	240
V. Policies for promoting sympathy in multicultural society	243
1. Roles of sympathy in multicultural society	243
1.1 Sympathy as an epistemological criterion of multicultural society	245

1.2	Needs of maintaining multicultural society	250
1.2.1	The need for public intervention	252
1.2.2	The need for indirect methods	253
2.	When should sympathy stop?	255
3.	Promotion of communication as a condition for sympathy	260
3.1	The reality of communication	260
3.2	A requirement of communication from the point of sympathy	262
4.	The mass media as a means for securing sympathy	265
4.1	Representation of others and the mass media	265
4.2	The mass media as a mediator of negative social relations	270
4.3	Institution of representation of others as a condition of sympathy: censorship and checks and balances	272
5.	Proposal for policies to promote sympathy and fellow-feeling	276
5.1	Legal and administrative policy	276
5.1.1	Race relations legislation in Britain: an example of constructing a legal and administrative framework for a multicultural society	276
5.1.2	Legitimacy and the limits of censorship	278
5.1.3	Equal opportunities for participation and representation	280
5.2	Activities of local councils and NGOs	281
5.3	Other activities of NGOs, educators and individuals	284
 Conclusion		 287
1.	The significance of Adam Smith's argument for us	287
2.	Further tasks	291
 References		 293
Index		309